SECTION II.

Principles of Organization

TKP-ML; In the age of imperialism and proletarian revolutions, based on the basic principle of internationalism “the proletariat's revolution in its own country”, it considers the revolution in Turkey as a part of the world proletarian revolution. It struggles to rally its members and the whole people under the red banner of the proletariat against all forms of nationalism.

It fights for the unity of the international communist movement on the basis of Marxist-Leninist-Maoist principles. It is aware that this unity can be achieved through ideological struggle.

It supports national and social liberation struggles that weaken and set back imperialism in the international arena.

While adopting international proletarian solidarity, it is based on the principle of relying on its own strength.

TKP-ML is based on voluntary unity. It accepts illegal organization as primary and other forms of organization as secondary. It acts with proletarian discipline functioning according to the principles of democratic centralism. It characterizes the principle of criticism-self-criticism as one of the most necessary conditions for its development. It adopts the two-line struggle within the party. It does not allow the existence of factions that disrupt and disintegrate the Marxist-Leninist-Maoist unity of will and action.

TKP-ML implements the 30 percent quota system in all its committees, especially its executive bodies.

Based on the fact that the organizing principle of the TKP-ML is democratic centralism:

- a) All central decisions are binding for the whole party. Members are obliged to implement party decisions completely, even if they find them wrong.
- b) Members express their opinions on all issues related to party activity in the committees they serve on and in the meetings they attend. Members can forward their opinions, suggestions and criticisms to a higher committee. Suppressing criticism within the party and blocking criticism with administrative measures is incompatible with the principle of democratic centralism.

c) Single discipline is valid in the party. As a requirement of this, individuals are subject to the party, lower levels to upper levels, minority to majority, the whole party to the CC, and the CC to the Congress and Conference.

d) Until the democratic people's revolution, which is the minimum program of the party, is realized, only the CC and MDK come to power through bottom-up democratic elections, since illegal organization is essential. Other organs are formed by appointment. All members can nominate candidates for the election of the CC and the MDK and can open a debate by objecting to the nominated candidates.

e) All committees report regularly to the higher committee on their activities. Reports, including objections and comments, must be approved by all members of the committee.

f) All executive committees of the Party are accountable to their subordinate levels.

g) All party committees are obliged to create a democratic environment for discussion in which members can offer their criticism and suggestions. The Party applies criticism and self-criticism as a condition for progress and renewal.

SECTION III.

Basic Organs of the Party

a) Party committees are the basic organs of the party in the masses and are organized according to the cell system.

b) Party committees are the collective working organs of the members. They are responsible for arming themselves with MLM ideology through regular training and educating themselves to the extent that they can apply communist theory to all areas of life.

c) Committees consist of at least three members or candidate members. Party committees led by members and candidate members are organized according to the cell system.

d) Each party committee has a secretary and a deputy secretary. The committee secretary is primarily responsible for all the work carried out and maintains contact with the higher committee. The deputy assumes the duties of the committee secretary when he is prevented or absent. The committee secretary is obliged to prepare the deputy for this task.

e) Party committees are formed in factories, villages, schools, fascist state institutions; within all mass organizations, especially workers' and peasants' organizations; in short, wherever there are masses.

f) Party committees ensure that the Party takes root in the masses and leads the masses.

g) The Party establishes special task cells based on its needs.

SECTION IV.

Leading Bodies

The leading organs of the Party are the Party Congress, the Party Conference, the Central Committee and the Regional Committees.

a) Party Congress

The party congress is the highest organ of the party. The congress has the authority to amend the party program and statute, to determine the party's periodic policies and tactics, to resolve the party's ideological, political, military and organizational problems, to evaluate the CC activity report, to elect CC members and substitute members.

The conference has the powers of the congress on issues other than changing the program.

The party congress (party conference in the absence of a congress) convenes every three years.

The congress convenes under the leadership of the CC, with no less than an absolute majority of the number of delegates. The CC may postpone the congress for a maximum of one year in extraordinary circumstances, with the approval of the party will.

At the will of the Central Committee or one-third of the party members, with a preparation not exceeding six months, the Extraordinary Party Congress or Conference may be convened before the expiration of the ordinary three-year period.

The congress shall be held by delegate procedure. The number of members a delegate will represent is determined by the CC. Delegates are elected at sub-regional congresses or conferences. All party members are obliged to attend sub-congresses.

CC members who cannot be elected as delegates attend the congress as natural delegates. Only elected delegates have the right to vote. Decisions to change the program and statute are taken by two-thirds of the total number of delegates, other decisions are taken by an absolute majority of the total number of delegates.

Members in prison have the right to express their opinions on agenda items during the congress preparation period.

Imprisoned party members can be elected as honorary members of the CC.

This position of the obstructed CC member is suspended for the duration of imprisonment.

b) Central Committee

The CC is the highest organ of the party between two congresses or conferences. The number of members is determined by the congress and conference. CC members are elected by the congress and conference. There is no requirement to be a delegate or to attend the congress and conference for CC membership. The CC leads the ideological-political-organizational work of the party in the light of the decisions of the congress and conference and manages the party. It is primarily responsible for the organization of the party and all activities.

The CC establishes the organizations needed to carry out party activity, mainly the Political Bureau (SB) and the Organization Bureau (ÖB). The SB is authorized on behalf of the CC in the period between meetings. It leads the party ideologicallypolitically. The SB cannot change the decisions of the CC. It directly leads the Central Publication and other publication activity. It publishes the Communist, the internal party organ, at least twice a year.

The ÖB is responsible for organizational leadership on behalf of the CC.

When the CC cannot establish a commission to manage the party-affiliated organizations, it appoints one of the CC members.

The CC meets at least once a year. It can also hold an extraordinary meeting upon the call of the SB or the request of one-third of its members. The quorum is determined by the absolute majority of the members of the organ. The SB determines the attendance of substitute members who do not have the right to vote, by taking the opinions of other CC members. Although CC substitute members are not obliged to attend, it is important to ensure their participation since they are candidates to lead the party.

If the CC cannot overcome the loss of will despite the participation of all substitute members in turn, the will of the party is applied for a solution.

After the participation of the substitute members in turn after obstruction of the CC membership, if the condition for the participation of the obstructed full member occurs again, this member continues his duty as a member of the CC from where he left off; in this case, the substitute member who became a full member continues his duty as a substitute member.

c) Regional Committees

The central organization of the party is based on the regional system. Working areas are divided into certain regions, considering economics, political and geographical conditions. In the determined regions, a Regional Committee (RC) is established. The CC must consider the opinions and suggestions of the sub-party committees when electing members to the BK, which it forms by appointment. The secretary of the Regional Committee, who is also a member of the CC, provides the link between the BK and the CC. The secretary is primarily responsible for the work in the region. The BK leads the region in line with central policy.

With the knowledge and approval of the CC, the CC establishes party committees such as Sub-District Committees and Provincial Committees. When they deem it necessary, the Regional Committees, with the approval of the CC, organize regional conferences as a means of understanding the party's policies in the specific problems of the area and as a means of operating the democratic consultation mechanism.
